Kerrey buoyed by vote

'Uncommitted' gets 31% vs. president

Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. — President Bush's campaign, slung by the protest votes of South Dakota Republicans, says it will now "work harder" while Sen. Bob Kerrey headed South today in hopes his Democratic victory here will ignite a rally in the delegate-rich primaries of March.

Republican voters on Tuesday reprimanded Bush for the second week in a row, with nearly a third of those casting ballots in South Dakota opting for "uncommitted" instead of the president's delegates.

"We need to work harder," Bush campaign spokeswoman Terie Clark acknowledged.

Kerrey said the victory over fellow farm-state Sen. Tim Wirth of Iowa and the rest of the Democratic pack would ignite his campaign. He immediately left for Georgia where primary is a week away and said he could not on equal terms against Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas in Clinton's southern base.

"I've got nothing to apologize for in a general election against George Bush and I'm going to run to the good Democratic delegates that I'm on the hunt for you," Kerrey said today on CBS' "This Morning."

Kerrey said voters were in a new mood.

"Now that the Cold War is over, now that the world has changed so dramatically, people saw that peaceful revolution worked in Eastern Europe, it worked in the Soviet Union and now they're beginning to say, perhaps it can work here at home," Kerrey said.

Bush garnered just 49 percent of the vote to 31 percent for the uncommitted state. The week victory followed last week's lackluster performance in New Hampshire, where Bush scored 49 percent in the leadoff primary against GOP challenger Patrick Buchanan's 37 percent.

"It's not as though we had the full-court press going on," said Clark. "It's a little bit of the protest feeling you sense in a place hit hard by recession."

The South Dakota vote was seen as another reprimand for Bush and a signpost of potential vulnerability in the fall election.

Two-thirds of Republicans who said they voted uncommitted told exit pollsters they would not vote for Bush in November if he were the GOP nominee, ABC said.

With all the state's 1,616 precincts tallied, this was the Democratic vote:

■ Kerrey: 23,974 or 49 percent

■ Harkin: 15,153 or 25 percent

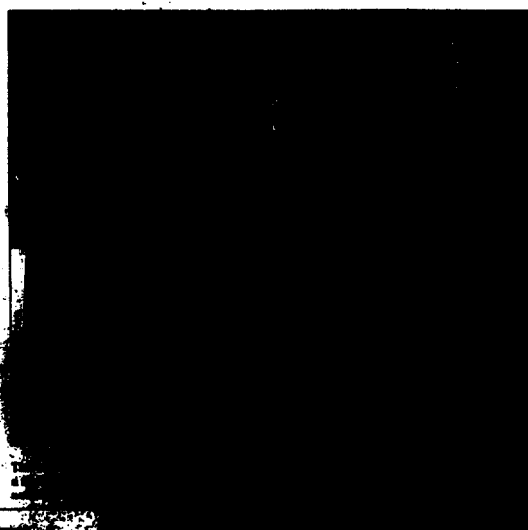

■ Clinton: 11,421 or 19 percent

■ Tongue: 5,756 or 10 percent

■ Brown: 2,394 or 4 percent

Among the Republicans, it was Bush with 39,546 votes or 49 percent; uncommitted had 13,716 or 31 percent.

between the United Way of America and spinoff corporations, including one that has purchased a $250,000 New York condominium primarily for Aramony's use.

Joanetta Bolden, a national organization spokeswoman, admitted that Aramony has flown on the Concordia and has used chauffeurs to get around New York City.

Also, there are allegations that Aramony hired friends and associates for highly paid jobs.

Last year, Rightmire's agency paid $24,176 in dues and received services from the national organization valued at more than $23,000, such as national advertising, training, emergency food and shelter grants and products donated by business corporations for health and human services agencies in Berks.

"For $24,176, we get far more than we paid for," Rightmire said.

That amount is less than 1 percent of the annual campaign proceeds, she noted.

But to eliminate any confusion the public may have, Rightmire explained that the relationship between the local United Way and the national organization is that of a trade association.

"We are autonomous, a volunteer-driven organization, as are all local United Ways who pay dues to the national organization to use the name and logo and receive services, such as training and technical assistance," Rightmire explained.

Autonomous means the Berks organization is independent and operated by its own board of directors. The relationship between the local and national is not binding, Rightmire said.

Jack Sherr, chairman of the United Way of York, said his agency will withhold $48,000 in dues pending completion of the national inquiry.

old son, Jason, was the only other person in the home, he was in another second-floor bedroom.

State Trooper Leon E. Krebs — a ballistics expert — said tests showed the gun had been fired from at least four feet away.

Krebs said he examined the pistol, a mutilated bullet found in Alan's clothing, and his sweater and T-shirt.

By first firing the handgun at the sweater, the trooper said he was able to estimate the distance at which the fatal shot was fired.

Brennan said an autopsy determined the shot entered the right side of Alan's back and punctured his aorta and one lung before exiting the left side of his chest.

Brennan said the pistol was found on a wooden stand near the foot of the bed, where it had been placed by South Heidelberg Patrolman John M. Sockell, the first officer on the scene.

Pagoda renovation backed

By William Casey

An informal poll of City Council on Thursday revealed wide support to continue renovations on the Pagoda.

Although officials could not agree on how the project costs should be met, they did agree that the new project requires a re-examination of the scope of the restoration.

"We're going to have to review all that, the priorities," said Councilman Ronald E. DiBenedetto. "A lot of the consideration needs to be on that."

"Once you get started on these things, you're hooked," said Councilman Edward W. Leonard. "I don't mind the Pagoda. If we're going to have a city landmark, let's have it there."

"My initial reaction is that the Pagoda is our No. 1 landmark," said Councilman Mark J. Smolkowicz. "However, we should take a look at the possibility of whether there can be changes in the work that is planned."

As recently as last fall, officials said the project could cost about $1 million. But, city records revealed Wednesday show more than $1.1 million already has been spent on the Pagoda in the last two years.

Planning director Frank X. McCough, the lead city staffer on the project, and budget director Michael N. Harvies both said Wednesday they were unaware costs had already topped $1 million.

Minimum contract bids for work this year, which council is expected to act on March 12, would increase the cost to $24.8 million.

Smolkowicz, who, like Councilwoman

Dawn A. Schutt, was not on council when previous contracts were approved, and the developments raise questions about who is coordinating and monitoring the project, and when council should have been updated about growing costs.

However, he said, that responsibility is muddled because parts of the project fall into areas overseen by other council members.

Leonard, who oversees water bureau operations as director of streets and public improvements, said he expected the new work to cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, but was unaware how much was already spent because the project was not developed in one piece.

"We see things when they're presented, then you don't see it until something else needs to be done," Leonard said. "I have enough trouble keeping track of the water bureau."

DiBenedetto, director of parks and public property, said he was not surprised actual expenses already top $1 million, but he did not expect the current round of bids to push the price tag up to $2 million.

Other city officials, he said, also should have been aware what the work has cost.

"I'm sure planning sees it, they're the ones that see the specifications," he said. "And everything had to be approved by council."

Mayor Warren H. Haggerty Jr., who agreed with Schutt that a re-examination is needed because of the new cost figures, said no blame should be pointed at the planning bureau.

He said, "I think my guys down the hall have gone well beyond their responsibilities" by overrunning parks and property projects in addition to their planning duties.

Lost jobs at AT&T tied to bill

Severe Lynn's message echoed through the hearing room.

"We ask Congress to consider very carefully why it needs to fix a system that isn't broken," said Lynn, president of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1888, which represents the rank and file at the AT&T Reading Works.

Lynn appeared before the House Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Economic and Commercial Law in Washington, D.C., last week to present testimony opposing legislation, which he said, if adopted, would cost many Americans their jobs.

Lynn is especially concerned about the future of the AT&T Reading Works and the 2,400 jobs there if the bill becomes law.

The legislation proposes allowing the Bell System Operating Companies, the seven Bell Telephone companies incorporated from AT&T in 1984, to merge with a federal antitrust suit, in manufacturing equipment.

Under terms of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. breakup, the so-called "Baby Bells" have control of the local telephone lines and the local telephone lines and a few related businesses. AT&T retained the telephone manufacturing and component operations as well as the long-distance network.

Claiming they now need to be released from most of the terms of the breakup agreement, the "Baby Bells" have been unsuccessful in federal court so now they're asking Congress to let them get into the manufacturing game.

But AT&T and its workers, who produce most of the sophisticated components used by the telephone systems — especially the "Baby Bells" — have united to oppose the move. They claim the Bell companies may be reentering everyone they don't want to build expensive manufacturing plants, but they're not as willing to tell the rest of the story.

The story, Lynn said, is the Bells will likely strike up partnerships with foreign manufacturing firms to produce components to sell back to themselves. Maybe some of those firms will employ American workers, but it won't be as many as AT&T employs, he contended.

"If you take a foreign telephone switch and put an American company name on it, that doesn't make it an American switch," Lynn told subcommittee members. "It is just a foreign switch with an American name on it."

And if you sell it to someone who thinks it's an American switch because of the name on it, you are doing a great disservice to the American workers who really make these switches.

Legislation that would allow the "Baby Bells" to get into manufacturing was adopted last spring by the U.S. Senate, despite opposition from Pennsylvania Sen. Arlen Specter and Harris Wofford.

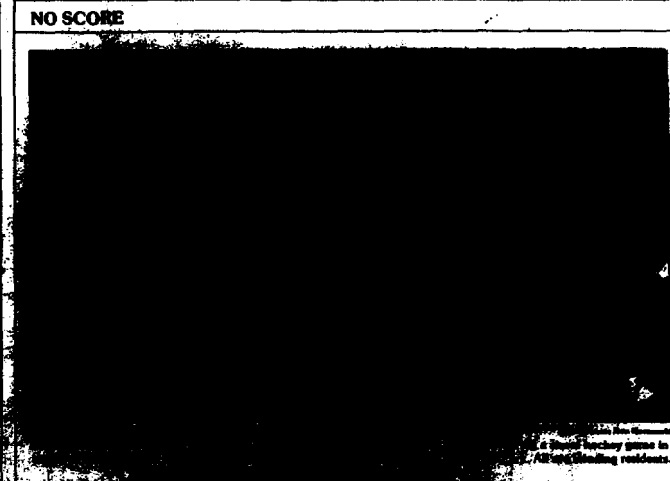

Similar legislation has been shuttled through various House committees. Lobbying is intense on both sides. Hearings like the one Lynn addressed have been ongoing.

Lynn, who serves as an executive board member of a union council representing about 20,000 IBEW workers involved in manufacturing telecommunications equipment, has been working on the issue for more than a year.

He is convinced more than ever that if Congress decides to change the rules now, it would have a chilling impact on telecommunications.

Congress would, in effect, be re-creating seven smaller versions of the old Bell monopoly, which would actually suppress, rather than enhance, competition within the telecommunications industry," Lynn warned.

Endangered State of Del. monetary

From any point of view, the state of Delaware is in a monetary crisis. The state is facing a budget deficit of $10 million, and the state is in a state of financial emergency.

An underground coal mine, this has been closed since 1980. The mine is now being used as a storage area for coal, and the state is in a state of financial emergency.

The federal budget grant, scheduled to expire June 30, could be extended another two years but only if the state takes steps to reduce the remaining $10 million deficit.

"The grant is no longer going to be there, and we still have a genuine threat," said Terry Fabian, deputy secretary for the state Department of Environmental Resources.

If serious problems develop, the remaining $10 million of the grant will be unavailable, Fabian said.

At the meeting, residents said the state should stick by a 1983 decision giving them the option to stay.

"Has the governor changed this from voluntary to mandatory?" asked Centralia Councilwoman Helen Wosner.

larger beneath Centralia, and does not present a threat to residents from poisonous gases and cave-ins, as the state claims.

"I hope they look at this realistically and not emotionally," said John Corling, the disaster programs chief of the state Department of Community Affairs.

"They say we're living in a democracy," said George Lettlin, 74. "We have a deed and they're putting it out."

Bill Klunk, the executive director of the Columbia County Redevelopment Authority, which is overseeing the eviction, said letting people stay in the unsafe area would open the state to lawsuits.

Chimneys, most on the south side of town, vent fumes from the underground fire and, on overcast days, the smell of sulphur can dominate the town. As the fire spreads, coal pillars give way and subject the area to subsidence.

The state plans to ask residents if they would like their property appraised during the next month. If they refuse, the state said it would take civil action to have the residents out by June 30, 1994.

The state is also considering reactivating the Centralia Task Force, which has been inactive for several years, to study the mine fire and its potential hazards.

Devine also claims that the fire is no

Staff overtime reduces welfare line

By J. Earl Rothardt

The daily line of welfare clients outside the State Office Building at 625 Cherry St. has dwindled to practically nothing because of staff overtime, Gary W. Rightmire, executive director of the Berks County Assistance Office, said Thursday.

"As of Monday, through additional overtime work, we practically eliminated most of the backlog that existed and now are generally giving same-day service," he said.

Previously, there was a long line of people, as early as 6 a.m., waiting for the doors to open at 7:30 a.m. When the doors opened, an attendant handed out numbered tickets.

Maybe 30 tickets were handed out one day, and 50 to 60 another day, depending on how many clients the staff anticipated it could handle. When all tickets were handed out, those in the rear of the line without tickets would have to come back the next day.

"The line has been cut down because of overtime work, and the situation has improved dramatically," Rightmire said. "People are being seen the same day and having a full interview the same day."

Another thing they think will help considerably when we implement it in the next day or two, is a change in scheduling procedures and in-house work flow.

"We're also going to do some scheduling of appointments with clients and we've hired additional staff."

"Our complement level is 146 people and we currently have 100 trained employees," he said.

His staff was reduced as a result of an early retirement package that became effective last year. A hiring freeze maintained the reduction. But the freeze was lifted in September.

Losing staff came at the wrong time, Rightmire said, because there's been a 35 percent increase in people seeking welfare benefits since 1989.

His agency provides four types of benefits — cash, food stamps, medical help (Medicaid) and heating fuel assistance for low-income people.

A total of 37,000 Berks Countyans are receiving one or more of those benefits, he said.

For the 1990-1991 fiscal year, a total of $128 million was paid out for all of those benefits, he added.

Fee hikes in general find favor

Proposals questioned for stadium, festival

By William Casey

City Council expressed general approval Thursday for a study recommending a wide range of new and increased fees for city services.

Council members, however, said more detailed discussions are needed to decide how to implement the recommendations by David M. Griffith and Associates Ltd., Harrisburg.

Among the proposed changes are increased equipment rental and user fees for recreation and park activities, fees for requested false alarms by fire and burglar detectors; and the establishment of several fees on spectators attending Reading Phillies games at Reading Municipal Stadium.

The study proposals questioned after a presentation by Griffith representatives were related to the stadium and a recommendation that the city seek reimbursement for services to the annual Scenic River Days.

The study recommends that the city increase the yearly rental for the Phillies farm club to $30,000 a year from $8,000, levy a 10 percent tax on tickets to raise another $63,000, and impose a $1-per-car parking fee to raise about $80,000.

It also concludes the city should be reimbursed by the team for groundskeeping costs, and by the Scenic River Days operator, Berks Festivals Inc., for services at the festival.

Although other council members said they want to consider all the recommendations, estimated to raise more than $240,000, Mayor Warren H. Haggerty Jr. said he will oppose the stadium and festival recommendations.

"The study shows us potentially what's out there, and this certainly has got to be discussed," said Councilman Ronald E. DiBenedetto. "Certainly we're going to think about the parking fees and ticket tax."

On Wednesday, Reading Phillies general manager Charles M. Lemons said he believes council is not going to consider seriously the stadium proposals.

Beyond the benefits of having the team and festival in the city, Haggerty said, the study failed to note that the city has seven years remaining on a 12-year lease with the minor league team, and that the farm club has invested about $750,000 in improvements to the ballpark.

The team also took over groundskeeping at the stadium in 1991, he said.

Timothy P. O'Donnell, state manager for Griffiths and those factors were not included in the study because the firm was unaware of them or could not obtain information on them.

Other council members said they will study all the recommendations because they would increase revenue without raising taxes.

"We're going to start a lot of things that are going to tick a lot of people off," said Councilman Edward W. Leonard, referring to 1992 capital budget deliberations now under way. "I think we're going to look at all of them (the recommendations)."

Councilwoman Dawn A. Schutt, director of accounts and finances, and Councilman Mark J. Smolkowicz said they also plan to consider all the recommendations.

Ruling saves the 6th District

Low water levels at Trout Run Reservoir, 581 feet, but not enough to...

Trout Run Reservoir

By Bruce R. Posten

"We're asking people to conserve water where they can," says Clark, Berks County Executive. "Although Berks County is not in a drought, we are in a drought of water, which calls for voluntary conservation." Clark, Berks County Executive, recently asked residents to take steps to cut back because of declining water supplies. Boyertown and Kutztown officials have the extended fall and winter precipitation and low water levels could mean a drought this summer, says Clark. Clark reported that Boyertown's 500-million gallon Trout Run Reservoir currently is at slightly more than 580 feet - 15 feet below normal. The reservoir is used for drinking water and irrigation. Clark said that the reservoir is at a level that is "not good" and that he is asking residents to conserve water. He said that the reservoir is at a level that is "not good" and that he is asking residents to conserve water. HARRISBURG - The 6th Congressional District, consisting primarily of Berks and Schuylkill counties, was preserved Tuesday by the state Supreme Court, which upheld a Senate Democratic redistricting plan.

An aide for Yatron said this morning that the congressman was pleased with the decision to keep Berks and Schuylkill counties together in the same district.

Charles Toet, a spokesman for the Department of State, said the decision matches the April 28 primary election to be held as scheduled.

No candidates have formally announced for the 6th District seat. In its action Tuesday, the court dismissed objections to the plan, which was recommended by Commonwealth Court President Judge David W. Craig.

An original plan would have eliminated the 6th District. However, that was changed as a result of the work of O'Pake and Sen David J. Brightbill, a Lebanon Republican who represents parts of Berks.

Ambulance crew cleared of wrongdoing in fatal fire

By William Casey

U.S. HealthTec Inc. has been cleared of allegations that its ambulance crews failed to follow proper procedures at a fatal fire in Reading on Jan. 7.

However, based on its review of circumstances surrounding the death of 4-year-old Michael L. Appling, the Eastern Pennsylvania Emergency Medical Services Council recommended that HealthTec set a policy of having two emergency medical services technicians accompany injured people in the most serious cases to a hospital.

Appling died from burns and smoke inhalation in Children's Hospital of Philadelphia's fire the day after the fire in his family's apartment at 120 S. Sixth St. Mansfield, a city fire bureau study concludes that HealthTec could have shown greater urgency and caring at the scene, but that there is no conclusive evidence that actions by HealthTec workers adversely affected Appling.

Spokesman for HealthTec could not be reached for comment this morning.

Company officials had previously said their internal review of the allegations indicated no defects in the medical treatment given to Appling.

The fire bureau report into allegations over the boy's death, including a copy of the medical council's conclusions, was released Tuesday by City Councilman Mark J. Brodziewicz.

The review by the medical council, which is licensed by the state Department of Health to monitor emergency ambulance services in a six-county area that includes Berks, was requested by HealthTec.

Brodziewicz, who oversees fire bureau operations as director of public safety, ordered the bureau study after claims by city firefighter Jeffrey B. Nein that ambulance personnel incorrectly placed a breathing tube into the boy, failed to give him adequate attention, and delayed too long in transporting him to a hospital.

Nein and Patrolman Gerald A. Boyer administered cardiopulmonary resuscitation to the boy at the scene after an ambulance crew member initially inserted the breathing tube, and then left to focus on the victim's 1-year-old brother, Joshua.

Although the medical council said CPR also performed on Appling by paramedic Antoinette Valeriano should have been done differently, it said there were no deviations from procedures required for emergency medical service personnel.

According to the fire bureau report, discussions last month with Dr. George Moerkirk, medical director for the council, and Dr. James Holliman, medical director for HealthTec, rebutted Nein's claims, some of which were supported in bureau interviews of other firefighters who were at the scene.

Moerkirk, of Lehigh Valley Hospital Center near Allentown, and Holliman, of Hershey Medical Center, said circumstances that led Nein to think the tube was incorrectly placed could have been caused by several other reasons.

The available evidence indicated the tube was properly placed, the doctors said.

The doctors also said reports that Appling was left untreated for up to 1 1/2 minutes by the emergency medical technicians, which ambulance crew members denied, would not have significantly affected the outcome.

They said an 11-minute delay in transporting Appling to a hospital was within acceptable standards, since the ambulance crew was also trying to aid Joshua.

A third brother, Norman Lee, 3, and the boy's father, Kevin, 31, also suffered minor injuries in the fire.

Smolkowicz said he had not reviewed the report in detail and could not comment on it.
